Dear Mr. Connally,

I write expressing deep concern for your farm. Are you aware of what your animals really do at night?

Just last night, I was strolling along the country road, when I heard loud music blasting from your barn. Alarmed, I felt obliged to explore the peculiar situation. It was 3:04 AM, I was certain you were sleeping.

I silently trudged down the dirt path. Leaves crunched under my feet. Small dark figures scurried across the dark field, sending chills up my spine. I cautiously pushed open the front doors. Bright lights from inside the barn radiated into the frigid autumn night. Taylor Swift songs pounded in my eardrums. You would never guess what I saw next, Mr. Connally. I saw your cows, pigs, horses, goats and sheep standing on their hind legs dancing. Skeptical of the vision before me, I rubbed my eyes, but the dancing farm animals remained crystal clear. Your chickens dashed around serving carbonated beverages. Your herding dog and your barn cats fought barbarically over the DJ stand. A large disco ball dangled from the barn ceiling. You can only imagine how disturbed I was. I am still trying to shake those graphic images from my mind.

Please Mr. Connally, take my advice and investigate the regular nighttime activity of your barn animals, for the benefit of everyone. Your discoveries will astonish you.

Sincerely,

Ms. Jones
